Greg Dennison concentrates his practice on insurance coverage law and litigation involving claims in New Jersey and New York. He regularly counsels insurance clients on general and excess liability, pollution liability, professional liability, errors and omissions, employers liability, directors and officers liability and commercial auto insurance products. He also represents third party claims administrators against allegations of claims-handling malpractice.

Greg was recently selected by one of his clients to serve on a task force to provide coverage advice regarding COVID-19 claims for business interruption under the Company's line of pollution products and in the formulation of the Company's position on COVID-19 coverage issues on a nation-wide basis.

Some of Greg's more recent experience includes representing an insurer in complex Federal court litigation over a $10 million business interruption claim premised on the faulty design of an energy plant that discharged gas without regulatory approval; defending a TPA against a $2 million claim for alleged errors and omissions in connection with a self-insured workers compensation trust; and successfully trying to a jury verdict the apportionment of liability for an elevator accident that resulted in numerous bodily injury claims where the general contractor qualified as an additional insured only to the extent of elevator subcontractor's negligence.
